About This Game

"Two days ago a monster appeared in the hallway outside the office.

Maybe if I just wait it will leave eventually."

Inspired by other walking simulators like "the static speaks my name", Food For Fear features very simple and accessible gameplay mostly involving walking and interacting with objects. It instead focuses on providing a dark and twisted horror story that explores the psychological nature of fear and entrapment. The game is very short so just play and judge it for yourself instead of reading this description.

The miserable excuse for a lock clunks open. With a gentle push, the door swings open. A child—too filthy to have a gender—looks up at you, plaintively.

"Where are they?" you inquire.

It lifts a single finger, pointing. A curtain divides the single-room dwelling in two; a stench permeates the room, undoubtedly emanating from the other half. Pushing the curtain aside, you look down on the man of the house, blood dribbling from the side of his mouth. He rolls his jaundiced eyes in your direction, instinctively trying to focus them on you. A woman, whose corpse lies beside him, has long since fled these circumstances.

Pushing his chin from side to side, you can see no evidence of your kind on his neck. A similar inspection turns up nothing on the dearly departed beside him. You attempt to ask him a few questions, but his mind has left him, burned away in the fever that will soon send him on his way.

Looking at the child, you wonder what—if anything—should be done.

Nothing. I'm searching for Wilson.

Erase her memories of your presence before leaving.

I take her to the orphanage at St. Brigid's. They will be able to take care of her.

Kill it. There is nothing to look forward to.
